I would really suggest to go to the next library and look for a good basic photography book. I don't mean the "Hedgecoe's" of this world, but something more oriented towards the serious photographer (which you want to be). My personal recommendation always is Michael Langford's "Basic Photography" and after that his "Advanced Photography ...

LANGFORD'S BASIC PHOTOGRAPHY Another reason for taking up photography is that you want a means of personal self-expression to explore your own ideas, concerns or issue-based themes. It seems odd that something so apparently objective as photography can be used to express, say, issues of desire, identity, race or gender, or metaphor and fantasy.
