Bloom filters are a charming data structure. A predecessor idea dates from pre-electronic days, when decks of Hollerith punch cards would be queried in the 1940's by inserting a rod into one of M holes along the top of the deck. Only cards with notches at the selected position would then drop out of the deck for further processing.

The JVM prefers to interconnect methods via static reference or dispatch through a class or interface. The Core Reflection API lets programmers work with methods outside these constraints, but only through a simulation layer that imposes extra complexity and execution overhead. This note gives the essential outlines of a design for method handles, a way to name and interconnect methods without ...
