"At the end of the rainbow is a pot of gold." He would say to me. Every time I would see a rainbow In that big, beautiful sky so bold I would cross my fingers and make a vow, "I would be the one to find that pot of gold." So one day I bid my family and friends good-bye As I started on my journey, following that rainbow.

MacLeish’s sonnet “The End of the World” is about the traumatic experience of the times. In the poem, the world is envisioned as a Gypsy circus full of absurd characters...By beginning with “Quite unexpectedly” and then withholding what exactly happened until the final line of the octave, the poem creates a sense of nervous tension until the last line where we learn the circus tent blew off.

The End of the Poem recalls instead the majestic Stanzas: Word and Phantasm in Western Culture in a distant, more nationally defined echo. I'll end with Agamben's words, for a taste of the matter at hand. It's a passage I've been waiting for him to write --- or, rather, waiting to find in his writings --- for a long time.

Oh YES - that repetition is a clincher. Or the big cue — here comes the end — in a well-placed ‘Therefore’: Therefore I lie with her and she with me And in our faults by lies we flattered be. But we of the disillusioned twenty-first century — we of the age of Donald Trump — can’t settle for the ‘right’ ending.

In The End of the Poem, Paul Muldoon, "the most significant English-language poet born since the Second World War" (The Times Literary Supplement), presents engaging, rigorous, and insightful explorations of a diverse group of poems, from Yeats's "All Souls' Night" to Stevie Smith's "I Remember" to Fernando Pessoa's "Autopsychography."

~~The End Of The Poem~~

In The End of the Poem, Paul Muldoon dazzlingly explores a diverse group of poems, from Yeats's "All Souls' Night" to Stevie Smith's "I Remember" to Fernando Pessoa's "Autopsychography." Muldoon reminds us that the word "poem" comes, via French, from the Latin and Greek: "a thing made or created."

~~The End of the Poem: Studies in Poetics by Giorgio Agamben~~

The book opens with a discussion of just how Dante's poem is a comedy, and it concludes with a discussion of the ends of poetry in a variety of senses: enjambment at the ends of lines, the concluding lines of poems, and the end of poetry as a mode of writing this sort of literature.
