Genevieve von Petzinger is a Canadian author and paleoanthropologist who is currently the only researcher in the world focusing on the abstract signs that can be found at almost 400 sites across Europe. This research and the 32 signs that appear most frequently in Ice Age cave art are the focus of her book First Signs. Not only is von Petzinger studying something that has rarely received focused attention but she can also do what few non-fiction writers are able to do: she can weave a ...

Community Reviews. So, context: The first signs are geometric symbols that are often part of Ice Age (10,000 + years ago) cave art wall paintings, which are better known for representations of large mammals (mammoths, bison, horses, deer) and hand prints in red and black paint. Von Petzinger was intrigued by the symbols,...

KIRKUS REVIEW. Given that the same signs were used over a period of 30,000 years throughout Europe, she finds it likely that their meaning shifted over time and in different places, in the same way that spoken languages change. Linking these systems to other graphic conventions may eventually yield some sort of Rosetta stone,...
