During the Cold War, the term Third World referred to the developing countries of Asia, Africa, and Latin America, the nations not aligned with either the First World or the Second World. This usage has become popular, mostly in the western countries, due to the ending of the Cold War. In the decade following the fall of the Soviet Union and the end of the Cold War in 1991, the term Third World was used interchangeably with developing countries, but the concept has become outdated as it no longer

China and the Soviet Union competed for influence in the Third World. Khrushchev's Third World strategy signalled a return to the Leninist idea of separate revolutionary paths. He supported anti-colonial nationalist movements - neglected by Stalin as part of the capitalist world - on the assumption that they might in time develop into socialist revolutions with vanguard Marxist parties of their own.

Chapter 27 The Cold War and the Third World 1. Introduction

Being a 3rd world country isn't a bad thing. And of all the third world, Russia is the fastest growing. Remember, Russia was born in 1990, and is a capitalist market economy. Russia has grown by huge leaps and bounds in the past 25 years. But they lack the cultural background to make the switch to a fully market economy.
